

The Beachboys : a gust of fresh air through the smog and fumes of modern life / by William Ward Martin

Description

A commemoration of an all but forgotten group of surfers of the 1940s and early 50s. To know their world is to experience what has been the envy of every person here and abroad who has been drawn to the california mystique. They were called the sunset surfers. They had no store-bought boards, no wetsuits, no leashes, no surfing magazines to pump them up. A collection of tales and recollections of the Sunset Surfers.